A novel porous nanocomposite of sulfur/carbon obtained from fish scales for lithium sulfur batteries

23.01.2013 - Scientists in China have used carbonised fish scales as a porous material to be used as a cathode in lithium sulfur batteries. The structure of the material enhances the cycle life of the cathode material.

Original publication: